

While I have heard Wes does not like 'mealy mouthed outpourings', I am afraid some of these comments may just qualify.

As the blog will close when Wes is released from hospital, I feel I should say good bye to a comforting cyber-friend that has kept Wes's various family, friends and networks informed and connected. Thank you Martin for your dedication and skill in designing and maintaining the BLOG.

It is important to acknowledge Wes's family's unstinting love, support and advocacy on his behalf. Sheila, Martin and Peter Wesley-Smith have put various projects and their normal lives on hold and relocated to Darwin to attend to the diverse needs and issues that arise out of such a serious accident. There can be no doubt that, above all else, Wes's progress and long term outcome has been so positive and speedy due to their input. I would like to thank their other family and friends who have been without them for almost two months now.

For many of us this has been both a frightening and inspirational journey. To see Wes fight to regain his memory and capacity to live independently after such a close call still leaves me with my head shaking in amazement.
